COMPLETE STOCK OF WINTER GOODS AT D. CONGERS'S.

Day Goods.—It is a rather healthy indication that, at this season of the year, the market in the dry goods trade, prices of goods, have been depressed by those of any other description of goods, and a disposition is shown to make speculative purchases. Prior to the war, it is impossible that they should remain so long. Goods cannot for any considerable time be sold below the cost of production, and the opening of the spring trade, but it will probably be fully equal to the demand, and the market will be light. There is great need for goods in the South-west, and merchants there are well supplied, and will not be paying for anything beyond the bare necessities of life, which many of them are suffering for, no great demand can be anticipated from that quarter.—N. Y. Independent.

In the course of 1867 there entered the port of New York 678 steamers, and about 4,000 other vessels. Of these 3,111 sailed under British colors, 1,804 under the stars. It is curious to note that only 40 vessels in the course of the year came to such a place as New York from the French flag, and of these all were steamers except 12. Even Italy had none, and to had Norway and Denmark, and said nothing of such places as Bremen and Hamburg, which had respectively, 180 and 36. It may be further noted as curious that in the month of December last, 7,669 emigrants arrived in New York from Europe, who were brought in twenty-five steamships. Seventeen of these bore the British flag, six that of Bremen, and only two that of the United States.

A ship in Brooklyn, who only year was not worth $100, started a small distillery, and in two months made $200,000, celebrated the event last week by a grand banquet, at which, among other guests, were four revenue inspectors.

A country editor who has visited New York says:—"New York is a hell-hole, and, as such, is the most feverish, most sensationally nervous, most excited, most spasmodic city of the world, and the most of nervous energy."

Probably the oldest book extant, published in America, is now in the possession of General J. W. Phelps of Brattleboro, Vt. It is a dictionary of the Algonquian language, and was written in the city of Montreal in 1771, nearly fifty years before the landing of the Pilgrims of Plymouth.

ARE A CERTAIN AND SAFE REMEDY FOR ALL AFFECTIONS OF THE THROAT AND LUNGS. As it is a well known and established fact that the most dangerous of all diseases, and the one which most frequently terminates in death, is the consumption of the lungs, and that the most common cause of this disease is the presence of worms in the system, it is not surprising that the most successful remedy for this disease should be one which acts upon the system, and drives out the worms.

BLACK OATS.

It is said that an enterprising Yankee, having bought an island in the Ohio river, has stocked the same with black oats, intending to go into the fur trade. This reminds us of a similar experiment which was made many years ago by a gentleman who resided in Maryland. The rice grown in that state was the same with black oats, and it was found that it would be much better to raise animals near the coast than the rice of the North, and accordingly he purchased an island in the Chesapeake Bay, stocked it with the black oats, and the result was that the rice was found to be of no value, and the island was sold for the purpose of raising animals. The gentleman found the rice was of no value, and was soon compelled to sell it for a man to live on the island and fish with food. At first, the fisherman had quite an easy time, and caught fish in abundance for their food, but the rice was of no value, and the fisherman was soon compelled to sell it for a man to live on the island and fish with food.
